

Abstract

The present invention is a multi-image display system that is essentially comprised of an indicia carrier on which are printed interlaced images, and a stationary electronic grating which, by means of a control circuit alternately reveals the separate images that have been combined to form the interlaced images.